

Library Displays as Instructional tools

What we use displays for?

- Highlight the collection and resources
- Increase circulation
- Build community
- Decoration and engagement

Why make displays instructional?

Displays can be Instructional.

The library space is often patrons' greatest touchpoint for library services.

Meeting patrons where they are can help close the gap between what patrons think we do and what we do.

They communicate the role of librarians as instructors and experts in information systems and research skills.

Using infrastructure that exists helps patrons see that libraries have always been instructional spaces, instead of presenting instruction as a "rebrand."

CHECK
ME OUT!

1 Summary

Summarize the main points in the source, including the original author's exact words.

2 Source evaluation

Evaluate the source's reliability and the author's background and address a topic in the work.

3 Application

Apply the source to the topic or issue you are researching. This part of the annotation is your own work.

The sources selected are for a possible

project about the relationship between gender and fascism

These citations are in MLA format.

Highlight unique topics

Involve students when possible!

Work with classes and one-shot lessons.

Help students see the presence of library skills in their lives.

Wampum is a cultural practice of indigenous people in the North Eastern Woodlands - Including New Jersey -

They use woven beads to aid in the memory of treaties, speeches and stories. These beads retrieve info from human memory like an index in a book or library catalog.

Use the ACRL framework! (address neglected outcomes)

NATIVE AMERICAN Heritage month

Gowanda / Karonnia / Two Row Wampum
This belt represents a treaty of relations between the Haudenosaunee and the Dutch.

Women's Nominations Belt
This belt indicates the names of the women of the Haudenosaunee (Six Nations).

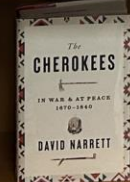

Hiwatha / Hayewenta' Belt
This belt represents a treaty of relations. Each represented through one of the wampum.
